

He will not spare other comments upon Mr. Webster's letter, where they are deemed necessary.

We have reason to believe that any attempt to bargain off Pennsylvania votes for the compromise, for Southern votes to raise the duty on iron, will be frustrated. If Pennsylvania attempts anything of this sort, she will find Northern men who will resist any such sacrifice of principle to a sordid self-interest, by refusing to touch the subject at all, who, under other circumstances, would be the most ready to do all in their power to revive the languishing industry of that great manufacturing State.

Patent Extension—Parker's Water-wheel.

Correspondence of The Tribune.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Tuesday, May 28.

It is perhaps a matter of importance to a large number of inventors, as well as mill-owners, that it should be known that the Committee on Patents in the House of Representatives, on the 9th day of May last reported a bill for a further extension of the privilege secured by a patent to Zebulon and Austin Parker for an improvement in the application of hydraulic power in water-wheels, issued on the 15th October, 1839, and extended by letters patent of renewal dated 4th October, 1843.

This patent is one that has for some time past excited considerable interest in the country. The considerable litigation has attended the attempt of the Parkers to enforce their claims for infringement, and there are reasons to believe that the bill now before Congress will be passed. The patent has already run more than twenty years, and yet the Committee propose to further extend the monopoly.

MORE ABOUT THE CUBAN STAMPEDE.

Full Particulars of the Fight and the Retrograde Movements.

From the Savannah Republican, Extra, May 25.

It appears that in looking after the Greole the Pizarro encountered the bark Georgia, which had returned from the group of islands near the coast of Yucatan, whence the expedition sailed. The Georgia had on board some thirty or forty men, who preferred not to accompany the expedition. These men were taken prisoners.

The Greole was made on the night of the 15th inst. The first attack the following morning was directed against the Jail, on the supposition that it was the barracks. The Kentucky regiment led this attack, which was warmly met by the Greole on duty there, and some troops who were with them.

In their progress through the town, the invaders met with a hot reception from all quarters, being fired upon from walls, house-tops, windows, &c. A body of Spanish troops, moving towards the Governor's house being hailed, returned an answer by firing. The Governor's house was early set on fire, but not until Gen. Lopez had been taken prisoner.

The house was set on fire, and the invaders, some of whom were Spanish soldiers, retreated to the next house, which was fired in its turn. They then made their way to a third house, where there were several ladies and children collected. The roof of this house, which was a low one, gave way and fell in, but no one was seriously hurt. In this confusion the invaders, with the fire at their heels, and the soldiers in danger of being blown up by their own cartridges, had no choice but to surrender. A white flag was, therefore, soon hung out at the window on the point of a bayonet. In the absence of any young ladies present, the purpose of a flag, one of the young ladies present gallantly offered an article of her undergarments, which was used for the purpose.

The place being taken, Gen. Lopez, who had thus far been unable to get speech of the inhabitants, which he was anxious to do, in order to save bloodshed, explained that the expedition came to the island to offer liberty to the inhabitants, not with the purpose of plunder. He issued at the same time strict orders that no property should be taken without being paid for, and gave other necessary orders. The effect of these measures was that the Spanish soldiers put on red shirts and cockades, like the invaders, and the expedition was made this way, and it is certain that the Spanish officers all remained faithful to their flag, exhibiting throughout a courage worthy of the days of old Castile.

The loss on the side of the invaders was some 4 killed and perhaps 10 wounded, while it is presumed that the Greole lost a great number of men. Gen. Lopez is of opinion that there were not probably more than 100 regular soldiers of the line in Cardenas, at the time of the attack; but during all these transactions news had been sent to Coliseo, a post ten miles distant, and to Matanzas for reinforcements, and large reinforcements were approaching the city, near which men having arrived before daylight. During the day, to some extent, the Greole had become a little disorganized by drinking, and a portion of them had been detailed to place the wounded and a quantity of coal on board the Greole, in order to enable her to return at once for reinforcements. Influenced by these and other strong considerations, Gen. Lopez determined to re-embark his command on board the Greole, which was done soon after the middle of the same day on which they landed, (19th inst.). On their way to the boat they were attacked by 300 or 400 Spaniards and 45 infantry. These troops fought the invaders with desperate courage, charging up to the bayonets. The Spaniards were killed, almost to a man. One of them, a common soldier, returned twice alone, searching, like the French officer at Waterloo, for some point where he might pierce the line.

On leaving the harbor of Cardenas, the course of the vessel was led by W. W. direction, in order to avoid the risk of meeting Spanish men of war, as soon as the land faded from view, Gen. Lopez gave orders to stand westward, his intention being to make another landing at the town of Mantua, in "La Vuelta de Abojo." The district so called is all that part of the island of Cuba westward from Havana. A large part of the command had, however, become discouraged by the warm reception they had met with by the Spanish forces, and had resolved to stand where they were. The orders of Gen. Lopez were repeated, when a council was called, and some three-fourths of the force determined to land at Key West, placing a guard over the boat's compass to insure it. The officers generally were willing to follow the General.

The Greole grounded in leaving the harbor of Cardenas, and remained six hours in the expectation of being overhauled by armed vessels. She was only got off after throwing overboard a large quantity of ammunition and provisions—only 30,000 rounds of ammunition remained. The Greole, in going to Key West, took the south passage, while the Pizarro took the north passage. Thus they missed each other in the Gulf of Mexico, and the Greole, in consequence of being attacked by the Spanish forces, was obliged to return to Key West, where the sick list diminished rapidly. The excitement in Havana was, in like manner, so great that not a case of cholera was reported the day after the arrival of this news.

It is worthy of remark, in explanation of the letter of our Key West correspondent in regard to the reception of the invaders, that they did not anticipate any considerable assistance from the people of Cardenas. Their chief reliance, as we learn from the officers of the expedition now in this city, was upon Matanzas, which place they were prevented from reaching by an unlooked for occurrence, as will be seen below. The popularity of General Lopez in Matanzas and the adjacent country, is represented to be almost unbounded.

We are further informed, that while the Greole was lying aground for six hours at Cardenas, with the momentary expectation of being attacked by Spanish men of war, the steamer Pizarro came into the harbor at night on one side of it in search of her, and passed out on the other side, without discovering her. Had the Pizarro attacked the invaders, however, they had determined to board her and take possession of her, which they have since learned would have been an easy matter.

Some thirty or forty soldiers came passengers by the Greole from Key West, where the remainder of the expedition was left. It was their intention to leave Key West as soon as possible, and return to their homes in the States.

Eighty-four doublets were found in the Treasury at Cardenas, which were brought to Key West, and by order of Gen. Lopez distributed for the relief of the sick and wounded among the soldiers.

Correspondence of the Savannah Republican.

Key West, Wednesday, May 22.

MESSRS. EDITORS: Our city was thrown into consternation yesterday morning, by the arrival of the American steamer Greole, chased by the Spanish bark Georgia, which disclosed the fact that an attack had been made on the island of Cuba for an expedition from New Orleans. The Greole left New Orleans on the 7th inst. for the ostensible purpose of taking passengers to Cardenas, on their way to California. Instead of gold diggers, they were bound to Cuba, under the command of Gen. Lopez, on the project of revolutionizing that island. The Greole, on the 15th inst., proceeded to Matanzas and surprised it, then proceeded up the river to the mountains and fortified themselves. There the name of General Lopez would bring the soldiers and the citizens to his standard. Having effected this, there would have been shortly a sufficient force to inspire confidence in the people and to meet the army of the Government. It was believed that the great majority of the people were in favor of revolution, and would, with the regular soldiers, declare in their favor as they advanced.

The Greole proceeded to the island of Matanzas, off Cape Catoche, on the coast of Yucatan. At this place they joined a part of the expedition, which had arrived some time previous on the brig Susan Lund, and the bark Georgia. The whole force was then 650 men and was composed of three regiments, the Mississippi, Louisiana, and Kentucky. Information was sent from here to Havana by a small boat, which the Government sent to the point of attack. After two days stay at the island the whole expedition embarked on the Greole for Cardenas, having sent the brig and bark back to New Orleans. They reached Cardenas on the 15th inst. at 2 o'clock A.M. Here, on account of low tide and other obstructions, they were delayed two hours before a landing could be effected. This delay with the Greole was immediately started by the Governor of Cardenas for Matanzas. As soon as they landed an attack was made on the greole, the Americans shouting as they advanced, "Libertad de Cuba y independencia." At daylight after three hours hard fighting, the city was captured, with the loss of seven Americans and fifteen wounded. The loss of the Spaniards is not known. The Greole, on the 15th inst., was taken by the Governor and Lieut. Governor of Cardenas were taken prisoners. This was necessary to make them surrender. The firing was constant and hot from the greole and tops of houses until the city was taken. The Spanish soldiers fought well and bravely, but the Americans, with the same dauntless and vehement courage that swept Mexico, carried everything before them, and in a few hours after landing, this city, of 7,000 inhabitants, was in the possession of our men.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

In the evening about sundown, a hundred and twenty lancers marched into the city. A part took a position in one street to cut off a retreat. The others, fifty in number, charged the Americans, who were all, with one exception, shot down. The Greole, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

to the fact in this respect it is difficult to say. Lopez has long had the reputation of being the most popular man in Cuba, but his popularity is chiefly confined to the southern part, where his estates lay and where he lived when a Spanish General.

Had the project of seizing Matanzas and fortifying himself in the mountains succeeded, Cuba may have been at this moment revolutionized. As in many other great attempts, however, the occurrence of an hour may have thwarted and defeated a well-formed plan.

Since the capture of the Greole, we hear through the Spanish Consul at this port that the Pizarro on Saturday last, captured the brig Susan Lund and the bark Georgia. The vessels before mentioned as having carried part of the expedition to Matanzas. They were on their way from that island to New Orleans. They had on board, besides their crew, some 15 or 20 men, some sick, and others who looked out and concluded to return. The Pizarro took them into Havana, and immediately sailed for the Greole. There were taken on board a great number of letters, which were brought here.

A small arrival here an hour ago from Havana, and communicated with the Pizarro. She is just going out with the Greole in tow.

Haste for the mail prevents me from giving you further details.

I should have stated that some of the wounded Americans were left. Cardenas, from anxiety, T. New York, and the Government of Cardenas were released on giving their word of honor that these men should be well treated—a promise they remembered most probably only while the Greole was in sight. The city is full of rumors of other expeditions having been fitted out from Mississippi and Pennsylvania. This is gathered from the adventures.

CHARTFORD.

A Key West correspondent of the Charleston Courier says:

All arms, ammunition, horses, &c. were collected from the citizens for our use. We remained in quiet possession of the city until dark of the evening, during which time the entire force, except General Lopez and staff, a command of 25 men under Capt. Logan, a lucky Regiment, had returned on board. The Greole, on the 15th inst., was taken by the Governor and Lieut. Governor of Cardenas were taken prisoners. This was necessary to make them surrender. The firing was constant and hot from the greole and tops of houses until the city was taken. The Spanish soldiers fought well and bravely, but the Americans, with the same dauntless and vehement courage that swept Mexico, carried everything before them, and in a few hours after landing, this city, of 7,000 inhabitants, was in the possession of our men.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having failed, it was concluded to remain at Cardenas, and wait until the Greole could be taken. The citizens, on the morning appeared friendly and disposed to join the invaders, invited them to their houses and treated them hospitably, but none took up arms and none came in from the country.

On the morning of the 16th inst. the Greole was taken to have been taken up, so as to render it impossible to reach Matanzas by that means. Before they could have reached there by foot the whole force of the Government would have been ready to receive them. This part of the project having